About Studio 7.5

Burkhard Schmitz, Claudia Plikat, and Carola Zwick began their partnership in 1992, seeking the freedom to work on projects that interested them. "Everybody does everything," says Burkhard, speaking for the group that now includes Carola's brother Roland Zwick. "That's how we cultivate ideas and maintain our openness and curiosity." The group's name – Studio 7.5 – comes from an early idea to rent a 7.5-ton truck, put a model shop in it, and drive from one project site to another. Obviously, freedom of movement is a big deal for these designers. They move freely and smartly when designing products for their clients. Going from concept stage to the model shop, sometimes within a day or two, they begin to create rough prototypes. And like kids let loose with a pile of clay, this is their favorite activity.
